Abstract: The Heath Care sector has been facing major external changes in the last decade, from the emergence of new health needs, to technological innovations or waves of “spending review”. These changes pose major challenges from a strategic and organizational perspective. In Italy they have affected the way the Health service is organized at regional level. More recently regione Veneto launched an extensive process of organization change aimed at improving health services’ productivity and quality. It implies a move to larger regional divisions (ASL) and the centralization of staff services in a new holding – Azienda Zero. The research project aims at analyzing in depth this process of organizational change, specifically focusing on the organizational design of the Azienda Zero and the services that are centralized at this level.
