Description
The Department of Management at Università Ca’ Foscari Venezia invites applications for a fellowship in: Inter- and intra-organizational global knowledge networks: a multi-level analysis of antecedents and implications

SECS-P/08 – Management
Tutor: prof.ssa Alessandra Perri

The research shall be carried out in English.
The fellowship is intended to provide the successful candidate with the opportunity to pursue his/her own research while benefiting from the range of expertise at Università Ca’ Foscari Venezia.

Abstract: Along the years, many industries have experienced a significant fragmentation of their value chains across the geographic space. This process has progressively involved regions that used to be considered as “peripheral” compared to the areas where the most relevant value generating activities were traditionally performed. The global disaggregation of value chains has intensified geographically dispersed knowledge sourcing. For instance, multinational corporations increasingly use their subsidiaries to tap into clusters of technological expertise localized in different foreign countries. As value chains increasingly span country borders, geographical systems of innovation and their resident actors become interlinked in global innovation networks. This project aims at investigating how global innovation networks are created and evolve in multinational firms, focusing on organizational, spatial, technological and relational drivers and implications of this phenomenon.

Who can apply:
Prospective candidates are expected to hold a master’s degree and relevant experience on the research topic and scientific-professional curriculum suitable to the development of research activities related to the fellowship.
